

Title: MID wave managment.

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

So I've been having a lot of problems in MID where to farm I have to stay very close to the other team tower cause my wave always pushed even when i'm just slow pushing. And once the wave is under their tower I can't let the enemy one push even if I stop csing and lose some. So this way I can't farm because I could get hit by tower on accident or the enemy could hit me and I can't do anything about it or else the tower with aggro me or even worse the jungler comes. I really don't know how to let the other wave push instead of mine without losing cs.

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 279]

if you want enemy to push 1. jus lasthit minions, no spells no multiple aa and dont hit enemy laner if you get minion agro. 2. push with aa and when the second wave comes and crashes, use all you pushing spells to backline minions and let your minions go under enemy tower. now you can just walk back to your tower or go to ward and the wave will come instantly to your side. (but you have to push it when the wave just came to mid and get it all the way under enemy turret) hope this helps!

[Comment 2 | Score: 87]

If you have more minions than the enemy, the wave is pushing to them. Having 4 more minions is a freeze. Use spells to break a freeze if it's in an unfavorable position. If you want to reset the wave and make it push to you, push your wave until it hits the turret. Then, just last hit.

[Comment 3 | Score: 26]

It honestly depend's on matchup and your teams goal every game. If you need to assist your jungler to roam or invade enemy jungle or scuttle skirmishes try and perma shove and roam or slow stacking wave to then go place a deep ward or roam top. But if you have a farming jungler and you are playing a midlaner with no gank assist then I would try and handle your waves closer to your tower to farm better while not being scared of ganks :).

[Comment 4 | Score: 16]

I was given this advice a few days ago and I've seen it in streams I watch too; when the enemy minions are gonna crash into your tower, lead them to the side lane next the river and tank some of their damage until your wave comes, then you can freeze close to your tower by last hitting. If you have pots you can recover some of your health back. I've started doing it. I find managing the top lane wave so much easier because it's a longer lane, but this has helped loads in mid.

Also another few tips I picked up is warding by the raptors in the enemy jungle and in the river on the same side, so you can hug that side of the lane. You know if their jungle is going to come to gank and it keeps you away from the side you might not have vision on so a quick escape. It makes it safer to make trades. Most mages are generally good at wave clear but learning to freeze is still beneficial to deny the enemy cs and xp.

[Comment 5 | Score: 4]

Make sure that the wave is fully crashed under their tower, meaning that even your casters minions are under enemy turret aggro. This will cause the enemy wave to slow push back to you because enemy will have to manage last hitting minions and deal with turret shot dmg. This means that if you last hit minions correctly, it should push back.

Do NOT use aoe spells on the wave if you want it to push back to you. By forcing the wave to push back to you, you could hold a freeze.

Please note that it is fine to give up a few a cs in order farm safely and possibly start a freeze. By holding a freeze, you force the enemy laner to either pick to get cs and possibly get ganked, or lose gold. Losing minions that are unsafe for you is NOT worth dying for , better to wait for the wave to bounce back and deny enemy cs while you cs for free on your side of the map