

Title: I'm a Silver/Bronze Top Lane player. I watched a few wave management guides and I proceeded to win more than 80% of my games after that.

Honestly transitioning from ADC to top Lane was the best thing I could do for my win rate. That being said, a close second was once I started playing top I realized I was leaving a lot of farm and XP on the table and I wanted to maximize how I could stop doing that. So I watched

guides and this helped a lot. I realized there was an entire aspect of the game I was just completely glossing over. Then I started winning game after game. I'd keep thinking my hot streak was up, but the reality is that I'm pretty sure I can keep exploiting this mismatch in knowledge up until at probably high silver and get consistent results out of it. I'm by no means a good player, and realizing just how much I sucked (and still do) at laning has made me want to learn more and more.

You can see when the difference happens the moment I got crushed that one Jayce game and went 1/9. If you're in low elo and struggling, check out the guides I linked.

Its really easy to tell which bronze/silver top laners will climb out and which ones will stay there. 90% of the time they just mindless hard shove every wave for absolutely no reason. They do absolutely nothing with the prio other than stare menacingly at you across the wave while you farm safely under turret.

But when I see someone build a slow push or actually freeze you know they are actually thinking instead of playing on autopilot. Those are the ones who will use the prio to steal your camps and kill your jungler while you are buried in a wave under turret lol. And in low elo your jungler is gonna have a melt down because they don't understand you can't give up three waves of xp and gold to come match the roam.

Keep it up bro, awesome to see someone take it into their own hands and not blame their team for their rank! Stay strong Macro play will get you much higher than Silver. If you stick to 1-2 champs and learn your matchups really well, then the macro will let you climb pretty easily.

Literally understanding the importance of catching waves brought me from bronze 3 to silver 1 last season (first real season).

Experience and map pressure are just as, if not more valuable than gold it seems like.
