

Title: I don't get wave management.

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

I watch pro players stream and they try to explain why they push, shove, freeze, etc. but I can never quite fully understand. Why would you ever want to push a lane while the opponent is still there? It seems like pushing has no advantage and just makes me vulnerable to ganks. I can get why you'd want to freeze a lane if you're playing someone like Nasus who wants to farm near tower all day. I mainly play Yasuo but I honestly see no point in pushing a lane to the enemy's tower. If I pull the lane to my tower, I have more kill pressure cause I have more room to dash around and chase. I just hit Gold 4 and I feel like this is something I need to learn to climb higher.

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 473]

You lose priority by being shoved in. Yes you're safer farming under turret, but where has their laner ran off to?

1. Your jungler cannot safely secure scuttles because they may walk into a 2v1 scenario.
2. Your jungler may not be able to farm safely because their mid + jungle may enter your jungle.
3. Your jungler may not be able to secure objectives since there are now two people who could collapse on them
4. Your side lanes may play more passive and lose pressure because now they fear for a 2 man gank.

Imagine if everyone on your team froze their wave under their towers. You would farm safely but lose all pressure on the map. Your jungle would be warded and jungler tracked (so dont expect ganks). Nobody could contest any objective because everyone is farming and would lose gold + exp by leaving, and your jungle is just left to power farm or waste time trying to gank which would likely be countered. This is why losing every lane in the game, or having no pressure, is a nightmare scenario for your jungler

[Comment 2 | Score: 73]

This is really situation dependent, I will give you an example

Cassio (skarner) VS Fizz (Lee sin)

1st wave: cassio doesn't want to shove the wave since she is ranged and fizz is melee. What happens is she only last hits (slow push) and fizz tries to last hit too (cassio attacks his health bar whenever he goes in with an AA and maybe a R).

2nd wave cassio will have a lot more casters than fizz will have, cassio is still slow pushing, still same concept as above. Fizz is now pushed in and needs to get all the cs. Lee sin sees that fizz is being pressured under tower but also understands not to gank! Why: if he tanks cassio will 99% live. Fizz 50% hp, Cass has exhaust flash etc. Now she has priority over mid lane, she can ward etc. Also because fizz is pushed in he can't roam.

This is only while he is level 4 but this can mean a lot when contesting scuttle etc.

My English is not too good but I tried to show you what I mean, I can always show you a video example if you want.

[Comment 3 | Score: 26]

A reason nobody's mentioned yet is that pushing gives you a minion advantage in trades.

For Yasuo, if your lane opponent is ranged, pushing curbs AA or single target harass when you're standing behind your casters. If they're melee, otherwise equal exchanges between the waves suddenly favor you significantly.

[Comment 4 | Score: 19]

Just and extra

Why You Should Freeze Close To Your Tower

Freezing in this area is good for a number of reasons:

- 1) It can stop you from getting ganked by the enemy Jungler.
- 2) You will not get denied farm and experience by the enemy champion.
- 3) The enemy laner will have to overextend for farm and gold.
- 4) You will be able to set up ganks for your Jungler.
- 5) The enemy may be unable to trade with you effectively.
- 6) You will not be putting yourself in a position where you have to overextend for farm and experience.

[Comment 5 | Score: 8]

Pushing while enemy laner is there let's you:

- Roam since the enemy will be stuck farming your wave under tower for a few seconds.
- If mid, you can force your opponent to farm with spells under tower levels 1-3 which doesn't let them poke you and uses up their mana.

- Level power spikes. If you push early, you will level up first because more minion deaths = exp.

You can use this to get early kills.

- Lane priority to secure objectives like drake or even scuttle for your jungler since you can rotate easily to help them if they fight.

- Pressure. If you constantly shove the wave mid or top when your team is winning, you prevent your opponent from roaming or leaving lane because they miss a lot of farm and will lose tower.

- Always push when enemy laner is missing. If you get your wave under their tower, it denies them exp and gold.