

Title: Trying to escape gold, i have a question about wave management, im currently gold, trying to improve on wave management. Im trying to climb with ornn toplane, and ive been watching soo many guides. i trade decently and i often win lane, but i have a question about wave management, and if im thinking right or not.

I wanna know if im thinking right. Lets say my lane is even, but my midlaner is 5/0. I should try making him my win condition, or atleast play around him. my enemy morde pokes me with q through minions and hard pushes as usual. I setup a freeze before the tower and initiate a slow push. when my second wave comes i have a huge wave coming and i should try to look for a hard push and crash it under enemy tower. he loses a lot of cs and its my perfect time to clear wards in the top river, and gank mid with Ornn ult.

Now, should i recall? If i recall now and go top again, when the wave is on mordes side of the lane, it should start slow pushing towards me right? Or since its gold and he perma shoves, it will crash into my turret, or if im fast enough with my recall i can go for another freeze and deny plates.

I think im onto something, I'd like to know if im right or not

I think your general idea is right. Crash 2+ waves to create more time for you to do ... stuff. Be it recalling, clearing wards, placing wards or ganking mid or whatever, helping with herald. Many options are possible. But I think your general idea of stack waves to create more time is correct imo.

Makes sense to me. You are basically saying stack 2 waves and crash them which gives you a roam timer to mid. I think after ganking mid it depends, did morde follow, did you just cc lock the enemy mid and lose no hp? Maybe you just walk back top and grab a plant on the way, maybe you have to recall otherwise you'd be stuck in lane with low resources, maybe you go with your mid and jungle to secure drag, there are too many different scenarios to say do this one thing every time.

Just check the wave so you can have a idea about what is he doing. Different champs have different speed at the time of cleaning waves, akali cant push as fast as yorick with ult, for example. Also different players do different things specially if they dont know what theyre doing.

The more waves you stack, the more time you can start out of your lane. You can definitely do It, but just check It while ganking and stuff so you know what is he doing and then you can recalculate what you have to do Next.

Btw, for sure you know It already but the most optimal momment to leave your lane is precannon. I mean, you have first wave, second wave (precannon) and third wave (cannon) well, you want to leave lane ideally at second wave, when the cannon is coming cause that offers you the maximum amount of time.

So the aim of the game is to crash waves on cannon waves. For laning phase they are every 3 waves. The cannon obviously takes longer to clear so if you crash 2+ waves including a cannon minion into the enemy tower then the next wave should crash as well, giving you a huge roam timer.

Making the waves crash before the next wave arrives is also important so the minions will target the tower and not the next wave.

Your roam timers aren't insanely high, and the length of your roam timer depends on what the enemy is doing and at what point the game is.

If the enemy is slowpushing the wave back to you from when you did a clean crash then I take the time to make a play mid or take some jungle camps. If they are shoving it then you need to be back to collect the wave.

This may mean making a roam and then going back to top without recalling. Sometimes if enemy support is on a roam timer and skirmishes with you in mid then they might try to play around with you and waste your time so that you miss the crashing wave on your tower.

If you have mid prior you can also spam ping your jungler to invade enemy topside and then you can proxy some waves which gives you an even longer roam timer. These timers are limited depending on the way you execute your wave management but can be used in a wide variety of ways. Most people just reset and buy items. The ones who climb faster are the ones who sacrifice their time to get others on the map ahead and deny enemy jungle camps or get good deep jungle vision.

Roam timers can be used for fixing your laners wave state to help him get a clean reset mid, or even recall and walking bot to lane gank and tp back top. You can get pretty creative.

Higher elo you go you'll start to notice your team playing around you more, so if you have lane prior your jungle will invade, your support will roam up to help with vision. With this same mindset of starting to expect laners to play around you, you should learn to play around your own team.

Think about where you've been so fucked from a bad reset that has lost you the lane. Now think that you have a roam timer and can miss 3cs but you can go to mid and save his lane from being lost, even potentially killing the enemy laner and getting him ahead instead.

Junglers have to sacrifice camps and therefore CS to retain game tempo and help lanes. Its the same for laners.

If as a Ornn you see you're against a morde and think ok this is easy stuff for me and I can get early lane prior (idk if that is how the matchup goes), and you see in mid you have a fizz vs ahri then immediately I'm thinking about looking for a roam timer to gank mid. Realistically if you can go to the enemy mid that is most likely pushed to your mid tower and get a kill or burn their flash then you can almost guarantee your fizz will have a much higher chance at winning lane and snowballing the game.

Hope it all makes sense.

I dont understand why he would lose a lot of CS just because you slow push, but in general, top lane wave management is very easy.

Push into you -> Try to hold it on your side if possible (I.E, Freeze). If you cannot freeze -> Let it crash. He will often base here. If you can shove fast enough, hard push it into tower. If you cannot do that, slow push so that he cannot fight you + tons of minions to hold the wave on his side. -> Crash wave. Here you can either roam, base, or stay and poke him under turret.

That is basically top lane. And try to fight him over CS whenever possible.
