

Title: Wave management post lvl 9

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

I'm not really sure what to do with the wave after lvl 8/9 in the top lane, atm I just perma slow-push, but I heard you should just shove the wave after a certain point especially when you're winning lane. Why is this? I feel you don't have enough time to do anything... What I sometimes do is stack 2 waves, crash, then try proxy (which I need to get better at because I forget to track jgler and die 50% of the time).

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 1]

You're supposed to shove the wave under the enemy turret (works especially well if its the t2 turret) so you can gain tempo to roam and help out other lanes, get plates on it turrets, help with dragon, etc. Its infinitely better at that point to just push as fast as possible (making sure you crash the wave so it resets towards you with minimal loss on your end) and gain advantages elsewhere than to stay in your lane and farm.

[Comment 2 | Score: 1]

The idea is that at a certain point (maybe like after 8-10 minutes) you can often gain more from pushing than you deny the opponent by freezing

Not sure what you play, but at least as a Garen main (only gold) some options are:

push wave into tower, take plates (ideally with demolish) and regen the chip after

Push wave into tower, go around or through and proxy for tempo

Ways to use that tempo:

Take jungle camps (krugs or gromp)

Take a great base (you can back before opponent can crash their wave into your tower)

Roam to mid and try for a kill

Roam to grubs/herald

Try to kill their jungler in their jungle

Recall and overload bot lane before TPing top