

Title: Having trouble with slow pushing/wave management overall

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

I main hwei mid. 400 hours. Hardstuck iron IV. Maybe now is a good time to learn laning fundamentals.

Lately I've been trying to fix my wave management, starting with learning how to slow push. As someone who has just been spamming abilities in lane for so long, I'm having loads of trouble adapting to a more passive playstyle. I repeatedly fail to build a minion advantage as my opponent is always trying to eat my minions as fast as possible. I try to scare them away from the wave by using my stuns but to no avail. I get pushed into my turret for majority of the laning phase and therefore end up having very little time to roam compared to my enemy. Furthermore, my turret often kills one or two minions before I can reach them. Not a big deal but it adds up.

Any idea what I can do to fix this? Cheers guys.

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 4]

Can you share.op.gg? I do not think wave management is the reason you are stuck in iron.

[Comment 2 | Score: 3]

> starting with learning how to slow push

Have more minions than the enemy minion wave, last hit, done.

[Comment 3 | Score: 2]

If you're iron4 you have issues with? probably everything not just wave management.

Probably best to do the following:

1- Drop Hwei and any other "high skill" champ, and stick to basic champions, 1 main 2 alternatives.

(Ex: Annie)

2- Learn correct fundamentals (champ kit, laning, etc)

3- Play to WIN not for COD. (Objective focused gameplay, not chase the low HP guy for 40s)

4- Read / watch some guides on your champion 1-3 champs

5- Read / watch guides on mid-game strategy, preferably for your champs

6- Go into your games with a focus on practicing ONE thing at a time, not worrying about winning nor losing.

7- Fix any mental issues if you have them.

For all the games you focus solely on winning you will not improve, and you may not win.

For all the games you focus solely on improving you may not win, but you will improve.

There's tons of basic drills out there you can do to improve your gameplay, I'm more than happy to share a few with you if you're interested.

[Comment 4 | Score: 1]

I'll start this off with the disclaimer that I haven't personally ever played Hwei, and I don't have much match up knowledge against him as I haven't played mid in a while. I have however watched a Hwei guide thinking I might at least somewhat learn what the champion does as he was one of my biggest blind spots in the game.

As far as I understood from that guide, Hwei shouldn't really have an issue establishing push priority against most champions. If you W+E then Q+E the wave, very few champions are able to contest that push. Moving on from level 9 this combo should also oneshot casters.

Also, when it comes to farming under turret, rule of thumb is full hp melees should take two turret shots, then an auto will kill. With casters you have to auto once before turretshot hits, then auto again to last hit.

[Comment 5 | Score: 1]

In iron, I would completely ignore anything to do with wave management and focus exclusively on champion mastery and the absolute basics.

-cs'ing

-mana management

-not overstaying in lane (very common in low elo; plays into mana management, but also you need to spend your gold to get stronger)

- being at important fights

- focus on improving at your champ