

Title: Early game minion wave management tips? Specifically for Top Lane?...

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

I have not played Top Lane for a few seasons. It feels like minions are different compared to a few seasons ago, or I have gotten worse...

I usually play more team fighting based toplaners such as Ornn, Malphite, and Shen. Sometimes I play Kayle, Tahm Kench, and if I am feeling extra spicy, Taric Top.

Is there a way to manipulate the first minion wave to push into your side of the map without having the opponent push the lane themselves?

In the last season I mained top you could usually tank the first few minions near the toplane bush near the enemies first tower and you could walk in the bush to lose aggro and the enemy minions would all target one of your own minions which would result in the enemy wave pushing into you. Is there a way to still do this?

Besides hitting the wave as much as possible, is there any hidden technique to pushing a wave super fast early game?

How to prevent an opponent from crashing a wave if you are playing a weak early game champ?

If I am playing Ornn, how do I prevent a Fiora or Darius from stacking a wave 2 or 3 crash?

If your lane opponent is proxy farming your minion wave, what is the best way to counter that?

How to know when YOU should proxy farm?

Any help I could get would be very much appreciated!