

Title: Is there something like a "basic rule for wave management"?

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

Hey there! Bronze 1 Zyra Support here. I know that one factor that keeps me from climbing is my basically nonexistent knowledge of wave management. So I wondered if there is something like a basic rule from which to start learning.

When I try to improve my warding I always remember the imaginary ward line which you can draw from the towers and expand from there on.

Is there something similar for wave management?

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 51]

I see other people recommending sro videos

now, I dont know about you, but I hate having to go blindly google random shit for an hour(s) just to find the single 20 min video I needed someone originally linked this to me, but then later when I tried to google search to find it again, I couldnt find it

When I finally found it again, I made sure to keep track of it so that I could link when people asked this is a playlist of 6 short videos by sro, and it is exactly what you need

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eQz3yU5tzJ0&list=PLzHaU28zdQ4GAMfvf_aASyiB4dheLsONx

you're welcome in advance

[Comment 2 | Score: 9]

If you look up some of SoloRenektonOnly's videos he usually explains pretty in depth about wave management.

[Comment 3 | Score: 4]

this is what I did to learn wave manipulation:

150 games with Garen Top (and went from Silver 2 to Gold 2)

Garen is the perfect champ when it comes to learning all aspects of basic laning in League and I believe that playing him for a decent amount of games will make you a better League player.

Playing him isnt even as boring as most people think because after some games you start to see the game from a different perspective :)

and the best part about him:

although everyone knows his kit, noone expects his damage. Even when built full tank he can oneshot squishies IF ahead in levels because, pro tip, his strength comes from levels, not from items ;)

have fun !

[Comment 4 | Score: 3]

Real basic is try and push to the enemy tower before you Base so that the lane doesn't freeze.

[Comment 5 | Score: 2]

Get more gold than the enemy.

That's the basic rule.

There are other ?rules? like...

Don't fight in the enemy minion wave

Freeze to deny enemy gold

Push to roam

Push to attack the enemy's mana bar ? only if the minion are set up in such a way, or if the enemy's spells must be used due to the minions' healths

Push first for an early level 2, but get pushed first for an early freeze

Push the wave into the enemy tower to bounce the wave back towards you (enemy minions group up, push back with tower's help)

Letting the enemy auto attack you will push the wave towards you (your minions auto the enemy, lose the minion vs minion fight, get pushed)

Either freeze or push. Anything else is disadvantageous compared to the mentioned alternatives;
Freeze or push

If your mana can afford it, harass the enemy laner IF he does not have teleport or if the harass is cheap and free

Those are all of the ones off the top of my head