

Title: Some things I see people doing wrong in Silver

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

Just gonna type up a collection of things I see people doing wrong in Silver that are pretty easily remedied with some practice and/or education:

\- Jungler, if you gank a lane and get a kill it almost always advantageous for all parties involved (you and the laner) to help them shove their wave into the enemy tower. You get gold, experience, maybe even tower plates, and your laner gets gold, experience, a CS advantage, and an advantageous recall timing because when they come back, the wave will be neutral or arriving at their tower. This is true in probably 80% of scenarios. Stop walking away from lanes after you get a kill. There is more to ganking than KDA.

\- Jungler, stop burning your gap closer to enter the lane. Especially when you have red buff or your laners have CC. Save your gap closer and your flash to match the laner's behavior when you simply walk at them. Use your attacks and movement to force the enemy to use their movement ability -- then follow with yours. If they flash afterward, congratulations you just successfully ganked, walk away. Unless the kill is 100% free, in which case you may follow with your own flash. Keep a note of the flash timer and try to farm nearby camps. If they return to lane via TP, loop back around and hit 'em again. Flash cooldown is 5 minutes, BTW. Its one of the most important things you can keep track of as a jungler.

\- Top laner, stop TPing back to lane after you just got ganked and burned flash. You're literally a free kill, because you didn't even give the jungler time to leave the area before you dangled your meaty, juicy, succulent, no-flash having ass right in front of them AGAIN. If you get re-ganked, you're totally fucked, and any decent jungler is absolutely going to re-gank.

\- Laners in general, go watch a few videos on wave management, and put it into practice. You can create HUGE advantages over your enemy laner without ever doing damage to them. Likewise, learn what priority is and why its important. I can't tell you how many times I watch junglers or laners go to a drake or a herald when the enemy CLEARLY has priority in the area, and just get mobbed, outnumbered, outgunned, and lose their lives AND the objective. Simply put, the lanes that have the pushing minion wave have priority. You ideally want two lanes of priority for an objective. Top and mid for herald. Bot and mid for drake. Otherwise, they can rotate to the objective before your teammates can, and you get outmanned.

\- Players in general, it is generally advantageous to push out the lane you're in before you leave to conduct business elsewhere. I've seen so many games where laners will leave to go to a potential teamfight, but they don't set the wave before leaving. So they win (or lose) the teamfight, but now they have no pushing waves and so they have no way of capitalizing on the victory, or the enemy gets multiple objectives off of their loss. The whole time the enemy is respawning, you're pushing out minion waves that should have been pushed out already. The whole time YOUR team is respawning, the enemy already has pushing waves because nobody set them up, and gets two towers and a drake. There are very few scenarios where leaving a lane to push toward you is advantageous if you don't plan on sticking around.

\- Junglers, when you're carrying herald and get a successful gank, do your best to get the turret down to 2 plates remaining (or close to it) before you drop the herald. Herald will ALWAYS destroy a turret if it has 2 plates or less, and the plates get progressively tankier as they go down. So ideally, you and your laner whittle down the first 2 or 3, and then use the herald to break the tankier plates because she does true damage. You should almost ALWAYS try to get one plate yourself with your laner before dropping the herald. Ideally, you drop it when there's 2 left to get the whole shebang. Tangentially, mid lane is almost ALWAYS the tower you want to be breaking with herald, because it affords you the most real estate on the map, and helps you control neutral objectives. So try to drop it mid if you can.

\- ADCs, please stop being afraid of situationally defensive items. They are your friends. There is no shame in picking up a pair of steelcaps/mercs, or a GA, or a maw of malmortius, or in some cases ALL OF THE ABOVE. There's an old saying from back in WoW days: "Dead DPS is zero DPS." Your Kraken/IE/Collector don't matter if you're dead because lethality blue kayn literally oneshots you because you built zero armor, or if akali zeroes you out before the fight even starts, or if malzahar pressed R on you and you didn't pay the QSS tax.

\-Mid laners -- see above, but with Zhonyas, Banshees, Rylais, Abyssal Mask, etc. Also WHY IS THERE NO AP QSS ITEM?

\- Ranged champions in general, if you're at a turret with a minion wave, you should be attacking the turret exclusively, unless your source of primary initiation dives the turret -- in which case you should QUESTION THE HELL out of WHY they did that, and whether or not it was really fucking stupid, and THEN decide if you should stop attacking the turret. In most cases, the answer is that yes, it was extremely fucking stupid -- and you should just keep attacking the turret. Very rarely, your initiator has made the right decision and you should follow them. Use your discretion, but I will advise you that in the overwhelming majority of scenarios, you should just keep attacking the turret.

\- Laners in general, in an overwhelming majority of scenarios, a drake/herald is worth more than a single tower plate. If all you're going to get if you stay in your lane is maybe 3 cs + a tower plate -- just leave and go help your jungler do drake/herald. If you're going to get a whole wave of minions AND 2-3 tower plates, then you should absolutely stay in your lane in and do that instead, and your jungler is an idiot because THEY should be helping YOU -- not the other way around. Most of the time, you really should go help your jungler do the objective.

\- All players, BIND YOUR F KEYS TO YOUR LANERS AND USE THEM. Top, mid, jungle, adc, support, EVERYONE. Set F1 (or your preferred key that makes sense to you) to top lane, F2 to mid lane, and F3 and F4 to bot lane (substitute jungler in there somewhere if you're a laner). You NEED to be paying attention to what your adjacent laners are doing. If you're playing bot lane and you're shoving your wave, and your mid laner is getting his shit pushed in -- guess who's very likely coming to pay you a visit soon? You need to watch for this. You need to be aware. It is NOT YOUR LANERS JOB TO ALERT YOU OF A ROAM. It is a courtesy, not a requirement. They SHOULD, but it is not their responsibility. At the end of the day, YOU died to a roam because YOU weren't paying attention to the map.

\- Supports and/or Junglers, if you're walking over to ward drake as it spawns or when its already alive, you're already WAY too late. You need to have vision around the objective 30s or more before it spawns so you can contest for vision and posture, and force the enemy to walk into you. Stop waiting so long to ward the objective. If you ever find yourself pinging a drake or a herald like "are they doing it?" just forget about it - its gone. You failed. You have zero control over the objective and you need to do a better job on the next one. If you go face check that objective, trying to put your vision down WAY too late -- you are ASKING to get picked.

\- Laners, if you're recalling with 30 seconds or less until the next neutral objective spawns (drake, herald) you're screwing your team. You need to time your waves and time your income to where you can recall advantageously about 1 minute before the objective spawns. That way you have time to get back to lane, get priority, possibly chunk out your laner, and rotate to the objective. Stop recalling with 15 seconds left until drake because "I have enough for my item."

\- Laners, if you're burning your TP to catch a minion wave on the opposite side of the upcoming objective (drake/herald) 30 seconds before it spawns, uninstall. This game is not for you.

\- Supports and Junglers, buy control wards every time you recall. Period. No further discussion required. It is literally your job.

\- Laners, if you ever walk back to lane with 75 gold and an empty inventory slot -- uninstall. Buy control wards whenever you have the cash to do so. Especially when a neutral objective is coming up soon, or you have a roaming laner, or you plan on roaming yourself, or you're getting camped by the enemy jungler, or you want your jungler to camp for you. So.... always, basically.

\- Laners, CRABS ARE INCREDIBLY IMPORTANT. They spawn at 3:15, and in an ideal scenario your jungler gets both of them. In a less ideal but still OK scenario, your jungler gets one and your teammates deny the other. In an average scenario, each jungler gets one. If you don't give a rats ass about winning, and you like losing games and enjoy being hardstuck -- the enemy jungler gets both. Also -- take note of when your jungler is arriving at the scuttle crab of their choosing -- its usually a good clue that the enemy jungler is at the other one, and you should position accordingly, IE -- not have your nose pressed into the enemy's tower right next to it so you're literally a free gank.

That's all I got for now. Hope it helps someone.