

Title: Wave management video guide

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

Hi everyone, I am looking for a complete beginner wave management video guide, I have tried watching a few on YouTube but they always seem to be designed for people who have decent knowledge about the game already, because I am really failing to understand what I should do with the wave and I feel like as a top laner that's one of the major reasons why I lose. Yes I am in iron so not everyone has wave management but believe it or not me as a level 70 player vs a level 300(even if they are iron) they still know the game a bit better cause of experience.

And I'd appreciate any suggestions on how wave management is done, thank you!

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 4]

A bit of a non-answer, but focus on learning your mains first (and preferably a surface level of knowledge for most/all matchups). Knowing what to do with the wave is so heavily intertwined with matchup understanding and fighting that putting wave management first is just not a practical way of learning the game.

Key heuristics that you can follow now, while you are learning the game:

1. Don't fight in a wave where you have minion disadvantage (fight in a wave where you have minion advantage).
2. Always crash into turret when you have minion advantage even if you have to take a bad trade (don't die) because you can recall after anyway

[Comment 2 | Score: 3]

Wave management 101

Dont fight with a great minion disadvantage, enemy minions will hurt you a lot.

If the waves are facing each other in enemys side, try to shove his wave so it can hit tower and bounce back.

You can recall once your wave is being killed by enemy tower.

The best place for you to have the wave is near your turret. This will happen when enemy has a minion advantage but he doesnt crush his wave before your wave arrives so if your wave faces 4 or more minions(this number can vary depending on the type of minion) the waves will be freezed in the spot, perfect if you want to farm safely or deny farm/xp to your enemy.

If you want to leave lane for a fight, shove the wave before leaving so you dont lose that.

this is the basic, you can ask doubts if you have.

[Comment 3 | Score: 1]

I think you should just watch coaching of your lane that touches on these concepts and write down some key takeaways.

If you are in iron, just following a simple concept can be enough.

Like: Setup slowpush on wave 1, hit Lv2 first on wave 2 and win the trade, slowpush wave 2, crash wave 3, recall and get back to lane with stronger items. The lane will now be pushing towards you again (only last-hit minions!!) and you can zone or kill the enemy laner (watch out for ganks).

[Comment 4 | Score: 1]

The only wave management you really need if the basic stuff is still new to you is you recall after pushing never before (better this than giving a kill though) and if you push wave return.

With this is more than enough for the beginning, try learn the rest of basic common knowledge and then try learn a bit more.

[Comment 5 | Score: 0]

Have you watched wave management guides for specific matchups/vods of high elo players playing those matchups? I'd start with looking up those for like the top 3 champs you face most often.