

Title: 1200 LP Challenger explains Weakside Wave Management

--- POST CONTENT ---

Hey guys, I'm John, or Desperate Nasus as most people know me as, I reached Rank 12, 1207 LP, playing mostly Kayle and Nasus. I recently coached a Silver player and taught him a valuable lesson on wave management that I think all of you can get some worth out of.

As a Top and Mid Laner, wave management is the single-most important skill to learn. In this video, I go into the Practice Tool, and go through multiple different sequences and scenarios to describe when to freeze, slow push, as well as describing how to manipulate a wave.

kinda hard to hear, the coach is quieter than the student and music makes it a bit painful to turn up

Whoever edits this video really needs to work on their audio balance.

Literally cannot hear the coach. Theres no way you expected people to sit through this video wave management is a really hot topic on this sub but I think after high silver/low gold it really diminishes in utility. The winning laner(s) will almost always dictate how the wave is played, unless you have a jungler to shove with you. But barring that it?s a very repetitive process of using your advantage to freeze to deny CS or just slow push for a cheater recall/turret platings. Does it get any more complicated than this?

Looking forward to watching this, very important for clash and such when I'm often weak side for my team! I've heard the audio is a bit scuffed, hopefully it won't be too bad though.
