

Title: Good resources to learn wave management/wave states for a jungler

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

Now I think its just something that I should know to just in general path better. I do want to play occasional mid lane or ADC sometimes but the main reason is that I want to look at the wave states of my lanes, and determine when the wave is gonna stack up and push, or bounce back and get pushed into my team, etc etc so I can better set up for dives, prepare for counter-ganks, or just find better gank timings in general. Right now, I think the biggest limit of my pathing is that I'm more reactive. I'm topside and coincidentally my teammate is pushing in a big wave? Ok seems divisible lets go. This is why in some good games I somehow have rly good KP, and CS as well. It wasn't rly skill (well I have enough knowledge to react), its more luck. Common complaints about me is that I'm always farming too much instead of ganking as well, so I really think getting better gank timings with better wave knowledge will help me a lot! Any recommendations?

\- Gold 2 Viego OTP (basically OTP)

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 2]

What I think you're actually looking for is matchup knowledge and Wave CONTROL.

Especially in Solo Q, you can't actually predict wavestates more than about 30 seconds ahead in the future. Too many things could happen, most of them caused by at least somebody going rogue and doing something they're not "supposed" to do with the following or even the given wavestate.

However, if we're talking about making proactive game plans and identifying good gank targets, that has more to do with identifying who has the most wave CONTROL. For example, it doesn't matter if the "correct" play for a wavestate is for your teammate to Freeze if your teammate is a Garen vs a half decent Teemo or Vayne. Dives are way easier to land if your teammate has significant Wave Control while the opponent lacks any AOE or Range. Etc. Etc.

In addition to this, it's probably helpful to learn the Engage/Poke/Scaling(sustain) triangle as it's super easy to identify for yourself and probably says more about how ganks are going to work out.

Unfortunately, there aren't exactly guides or spreadsheets for this, but for the vast majority of matchups they're fairly obvious if you know who has higher Range and even basic eyeball details about the first ability both champs max.

[Comment 2 | Score: 1]

Do you play with locked cam? What information do you usually gather in the early game? I think it sounds like you're struggling with replicability+consistency, which I guess is what everyone struggles with in soloqueue but it's good you're focusing on it as a jungler.

As for your actual request, PerryJG is one of the best jungle teachers out there and his videos have tons of information. As a bonus, one of his mains is Viego.

<https://youtu.be/QlcTtCgZfPQ>

<https://youtu.be/h3xo-pZq-OU>

One of the things Perry often recommends is pathing to the same side every game and always taking the same build+runes so you have less decision points, you're used to your item/level spikes, and can focus on what you're actually trying to learn.

Phylaris is an og jungle teacher and he's also done a ton of clear guide/examples:

<https://youtu.be/8YJ4AZAJ6T8>

[Comment 3 | Score: 1]

Step 1: When the game is loading up come up with a plan for how you wanna play out the early/mid game. It takes experience but you want to figure out which side of the map you have an advantage on (ask yourself if you win 2v2 topside or 3v3 botside) and importantly which lanes can help you to pull off a gank and which lanes even benefit from getting a gank. (it's gonna be hard to gank for your jinx/janna but it's gonna be easy to gank for your draven/naut)

Step 2: There's a ton of resources on this on youtube but the goal is to know what's happening with the lane. Playing a lane a few times will definitely help you out to understand this but you can also check out the guides. Rule of thumb is that whichever side has more minions will generally be pushing but there are other things that come into play like where the waves meet in the lane.

[Comment 4 | Score: 1]

Watch AloisNL, he's a top lane educational streamer and YouTuber, but his videos about waves states apply to every role. I also feel like top laners will typically have better knowledge of wave states as taking a bad reset on one wave even if they get a kill can literally be game ending vs bot lane or mid lane where it's harder for freezes to take place unless they are extremely far behind.