

Title: How to manage waves as shen

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

I like the champion, but I feel like his absolute lack of waveclearing and turret damaging tools force me to lose lane no matter what.

I could get as many kills as I want but I'd still be forced to lose xp and gold, cause I can't clear waves fast enough to crash and recall.

Also, I feel like the only item that gives him good waveclear is titanic, with hollow radiance being the second best, but it's too situational. So basically, everygame I have to choose between suffering from csing and not stacking heartsteel.

What am I doing wrong?

Play him mid or supp, I'm serious. Mid is shorter so you can keep with slower wave clear. Supp I obvious.

Also Titanic is a good 2nd item after Heartsteel too.

Disclaimer: I peaked D3 playing support. Playing top, I peaked at Diamond promos (got there 14 times) but never actually got into Diamond.

In my head, Shen isn't forced to lose lane because his base damage is actually insane and you're energy based so you don't have to manage your mana for trades.

For wave management, you just have to be more careful. Slowpush into hardpush constantly. You can't really ever "hardpush" anything until you get an item to do so. Alternatively, you just have to remember the principle that led players to crash waves in the first place: Base when the wave is pushing towards you.

Basically, a good base is one where you gain the greatest advantage over your opponent, not necessarily the one where you shove it into the turret. You can base when the wave is slow pushing into you, freezing on your side, or even just meeting in the middle.

EDIT: This isn't to say that all bases when the wave is slow pushing towards you/freezing on your side/meeting in the middle are good. Wave states are conditional. You don't even need to take good resets to reach Diamond.

Always be auto attacking the wave with q, weave in grasp procs for trades. I also just don't build heartsteel. It's too expensive and waveclear is too important for top shen. Bami's into sunfire or hollow radiance, whichever one will help more in that game.

After a kill, if the wave is already pushing to you you don't need to crash it, you can freeze it and they'll still lose minions

Don't most Shens rush Sunfires or at least the magic dmg item specifically to manage the wave better? It also depends on match up cause you can do some good dmg with Q and keep up to most but he is typically played under tower both for lack of clear and E under towers.
