

Title: How do you practice wave management/laning if the opponent is super aggressive?

I'm new to league and have been able to slowly climb to Iron 2 from 4 thanks to advice on here. I have been playing tryndamere top lane but I never win lanes. I have just been trying to die less even if I don't do much but I'm confused on how to apply wave management when my opponents are always very aggressive. Like, I'll go for 1 last hit and suddenly most opponents just gun it for me lol. Idk, are there champions that just make things easier? Maybe I am choosing characters that are not favored in that playstyle. Would like to adjust to improve but stumped on how. I watch tons of guides and videos. (Watching Xiaohao Tryn and foggedftw2)

Controlling the wave is the prize of the winner basically.

You can still test the water, and see if your opp lets you get away with certain stuff, but ultimately you cant force if you are in a losing position.

So a better (first) question for you to ask is how to determine who's stronger and who's weaker in a given situation. And why is that so.

The thing about top lane is you need to understand matchups, and when a certain 1v1 favors you. This requires to either watch streamers or matchups on yt or you just send it in game and see what happens.

What you want to do is:

- Not leash
- Hit the minions as soon as they meet to get lvl 2 first
- Last hit as good as you can, your csing could use work
- if you hit lvl 2 first just send it and go all in

If you want to improve you need to limit test. Playing safe is counterproductive.

When I started learning top last season I had a 27% win rate at some point, went from D3 to E3.

Now I'm D4-3 again as top laner. (Was support)

Sounds like you're getting caught with no lane prio. If your enemy has more minions on the field, attacking you is beneficial. If there are a sea of red minions just hit them under tower

Okkie.

So like you probably need to learn trading patterns.

So like with trynd you should have a full rage bar when you go for trades because it gives you free crits.

So build your rage bar, use E to enemy aa, aa, W as they run away, aa, aa

Then if you need sustain Q at the end of the trade to gain health.

Between the grasp procs and the q sustain you should manage early game.

Really, unless your enemy reaches level 2 first or you are against a ranged match up you should be okay.

Other than that, utilize your jungle to punish the enemy for pushing the wave in.

To do this you would need to practice learning how to freeze a wave.

But if your enemy lane is ahead in levels, items; they will play aggressive and you can't stop it immediately. Don't let the lane get to that point.

Focus hard on maintaining xp, not missing waves because of bad recalls, ect.

Edit: also consider running Teleport instead of ignite.

I think it's good practice to know how to play aggressive. This season/meta doesn't really suit long safe games anymore; there's a lot of skirmishing.

You want to ask these questions. "Can I out-trade level 1?". If yes, then how? (i.e. Take E first as tryndamere and you be the one to run them down if you win that level 1, or 2, or 3, etc trade). If not, then why? (i.e. Were you countered? Do you lose the early trade? How will you farm if they try to freeze wave and zone you?). Some of these questions can be answered in Champ Select. Others can only be answered when you observe what your opponent is doing.

If you aren't contesting for objectives (i.e. your JG wants to take voidgrubs) and you need to play safe, you want to freeze the wave just outside of your tower's range. If you want to look for a gank, to deep ward their jg, recall, etc, then you want to quickly push/shove. Freezing towards your side will cause a large wave of your minions to crash into their side. Vice versa, pushing into their side will cause a large wave of minions to crash to your side.

Several things here. Let's say you freeze the wave just outside your tower's range (by leaving a few ranged minions alive and a melee one). The upside is that it's harder for the enemy JG to gank you, easier for your JG to gank. The downside is that if you die or are forced to leave lane, you lose a lot of XP/minions.

Let's say you crash a big wave into their side. This is useful for deterring JG ganks as well (depending on you/your opponent's HP) as taking two full waves of minion dmg is no joke. Also, if you kill them or force them to leave lane, they lose a lot of XP/minions.

Lastly, I wouldn't watch too many videos at once. Just stick with a couple in depth champ-specific guides instead of all this general knowledge that you likely can't apply all at once.
