

Title: Is minion wave management worth learning in Bronze/Silver?

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

hi!! I've recently started playing again after a 3-4 year break & after warming up a little I went into comp (have never played League ranked before that except for placements). Not sure what I placed anymore but I'm currently in Bronze I promos. I've been trying to learn more in depth stuff like minion wave control, but had a few questions since what I'm learning doesn't really translate well into my games.

\- I mostly play Lux in mid lane. I 've been trying to do the slow-push bounce-back strat in the first 2-4 levels, but the enemy mid laners simply don't care about that & put all of their spells into poke/minion kills & then stare at me lmao. That way I can get some decent poke in, but they just do the same thing next skill rotation. Is there counterplay to that or is it simply a low elo thing?

\- Mid-late game when I try to set up a slow push, the enemy ADC instantly comes to clear the wave, no matter if they have to defend mid lane at the time or not. Is that my fault in timing or their fault in not knowing prio/just going for the next wave they see? Is that a counter play to slow push? Most of the videos I've watched explain what slow push etc. is, but not how to counter it - so ldk if that's my fault or not.

​

Also in regards to split pushing. When do I know it's the right time to do that in general?

(off topic) Should I just focus on learning/mastering new champs that are stronger than Lux to get out of Bronze/Silver? I also want to have fun with the game, but I go across either a Kata, Yas, Fizz etc. every game it feels like & it gets frustrating. It doesn't matter how hard I poke & dodge their skills, they can just flash + R me & I'm dead even with 2/3rd health. It's also frustrating getting them down to 20 hp & no mana but my jgl is not picking up the kill because they're too busy doing raptors literally right next to me. Is that just low elo frustrations I have to get over?

​

Thanks in advance!!

edit: I see now I sounded a little pretentious in my post & I didn't mean to do that at all. All the tips so far have helped me see what I'm doing right & wrong. Thank you so much summonerschool community <3

--- TOP COMMENTS ---

[Comment 1 | Score: 32]

You need to learn everything just slowly get better at things. But becoming better at laning is one of the best ways to improve.

[Comment 2 | Score: 10]

wave managment is always worth learning doesn't matter the elo, chances are your low elo opponent won't be good at it so if you master it you can beat them soley from better macro knowledge.

[Comment 3 | Score: 29]

Everything you can learn is worth learning regardless of elo.

[Comment 4 | Score: 10]

to slow push you need to only last hit AND you need to be able to zone enemy out of minions otherwise they just clear those and match your push.

a lead can be you are 10-0 or level 1-3 in a ranged vs melee matchup where you have range advantage.

this video explain common starting:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=T-4ugulF2Lc>

mid-late you don't want to slow push, wave management is important early but the later the game is the more you just want to push&roam to help the team.

about kata pressing R that is how melee champs work, they are all-in and you are poke, stay out of daggers, keep in mind that kata Q land behind first target hit so dodge on the side if she throw it at you.

wave management can help but i think that the most important thing a bronze player should learn is: what enemy champ does, when they are weak and when they are not, their key ability...

silver: get objectives, that is, sound stupid obvious and simple but it's not that easy... a quick example: don't overextend to siege a T2 tower that is defended by enemy team just to waste time/die because someone dive, get second hearld instead. past min 25 if your team get two kills you spam ping baron.

i play lux mid too, if you want i can try to take a look at a replay with you over discord

[Comment 5 | Score: 3]

I wouldn't worry about another champ with regards to climbing. I play lux mid occasionally and these things are what are most impactful IMO.

1. Get consistent at early laning (before 6). Get good cs so you can get lost chapter asap (I like rushing boots as well, but that's because of an upcoming point.)
2. Play around jg. It is paramount that you pay attention to what your jg is doing, while trying to track the enemy jg. I usually ward the side of the map my jg is playing towards, so that I can help him if he needs it with scuttle or a gank or whatever.
3. Abuse your waveclear. As lux you basically instaclear waves from mid game on. This is what I like a lot. If you play it well, the opponent never gets to siege mid, because you always can clear the wave before it hits tower. If the enemy allows it, I drop down e behind their tower before the wave even arrives, let it stack up, and pop it. My next e will clear the wave the moment they meet in the middle. This gives you a lot of time to roam and get vision while the enemy mid is stuck collecting farm.
4. Be proactive. Lux is not the best roamer, due to the fact that you have no mobility and few escape tools, so if you get caught, you're basically dead. BUT if you manage to get constant prio in mid and set up vision properly, roaming around the map can be very risk free and rewarding. If you don't have a lot of time, you can even send an ult to botlane from halfway through the river, just to piss em off ;). This is also why I like early boots. It helps a great deal with the shove and roam playstyle.