

Title: Five wave managing fundamentals everyone could apply to improve.

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

1. You can use your spells if you know your opponent can't push faster than you in order to push him undertower and get a cs lead and/or get free poke.
2. You can push the wave and roam instantly after to give your opponent a choice between following you and losing cs or staying but giving you a free roam.
3. Always push the wave after killing your lane opponent if he can't TP back to lane before you clear it (track enemy jungle before doing so because he might punish you) so he loses a full wave on top of dying. You can ask your jungler's help to push and it might not be worth pushing if you know you're at risk of death by the jungler or a roam.
4. Try to push the wave before recalling to prevent yourself from losing CS by the time you come back to lane.
5. If you know your opponent will try to push to your tower before you come back, try to recall when the cannon wave is about to come so that your opponent has a harder time pushing to your tower and the cannon minion will tank for longer, securing you most of the wave (instead of them all dying before you come back.)

Those are some basic tips to apply to make your laning cleaner, hope it helps!