

Title: I get "cheesed" by "Low ELO champions" and I'm getting tired of my skill issue.

Score:

--- POST CONTENT ---

Greetings, I'm Esmund. I'm a Silver Top Laner.

"Low ELO champions" would be defined as champions that low ELO players struggle in outplaying or countering via fundamentals, such as their micro and wave control/management.

Champions such as:

\- Nasus,

\- Kayle,

\- Teemo,

\- Urgot,

\- Heimerdinger,

\- Vayne,

\- Varus,

\- Cho'Gath,

\- Trundle,

\- Sett (a bruiser I struggle against),

\- Mordekaiser (another bruiser/juggernaut I struggle against),

\- Illaoi,

\- Kennen,

\- Olaf,

\- Yorick, and \- Singed.

My champion pool:

- \- Pantheon Top,
- \- Zaahen Top, and
- \- Renekton Top.

I'm mostly playing Renekton recently due to his extremely versatile moveset, and I've been told that if I can climb out of low ELO through playing him most, it'll build my fundamentals in Micro and Macro - leading to a smoother experience when I'm mid-high ELO.

There's a piece of advice I'm against: "Just play more."

\- I've only been playing for a few months, so I get the point. But that's the same as telling a person who intends to lose weight: "Just get into a calorie defecit." It's a self-evident statement that leads to no benefit. I can play more, but am I playing right? Am I learning effectively?

I want a clear and effective way to improve.

How do I resolve this skill issue?

What resources can I take to resolve it?

What general mindsets and perspectives can you provide for me to see the game in a more optimal light?

Things I do:

- \- Practice CS-ing in the practice range daily.
- \- Play multiple Draft games to warm up and get a feel for the game.
- \- I review every game I play in ranked.
- \- I watch Dosmium Replays of Pantheon Top/Mid, Zaahen Top, and Renekton Top against the match-ups. Yet, I seemingly can't apply what it is they do correctly. I reckon I'm not noticing the mistakes the players are making.

\- I watch Renekton and Pantheon Challenger players, like Spear Shot and Godrekton, for a more in-depth, entertaining, and presented flow for each champion.

\- I watch Alois for the explanations on fundamentals ("Fanta mentos"), but I can't seem to apply the logic accordingly. Often, when I try to apply the things he explains, I get punished in micro, or the wavestate turns to the exact opposite situation I desire. "I want a freeze here,*" but even if I last hit, it still pushes to the enemy turret.

I understand I'm looking for a logical breakdown of the game, on a game that's generally built on intuition when played. But I'm not a very intuitive person.

I'm enjoying the game.

I don't want to make others struggle because I keep getting "cheesed."